Subject: Keep parents and teens talking about important issues with this proven-effective program

Promote better family management and communication skills

View in browser.

When it comes to keeping teenagers away from drugs, violence, and delinquency, parent engagement is critical -- especially during the middle and early high school years when peer pressure is high and risky behaviors are more likely. That's why we offer Staying Connected with Your Teen -- a flexible, proven-effective program that brings parents and teens together to learn effective communication and conflict-resolution skills!

This science-based series of video- and workshop-based modules helps participants improve family communication and family bonding in order to reduce or inhibit adolescent participation in early antisocial behavior (including substance abuse, delinquency, teen pregnancy, school dropout, and youth violence). Now is an ideal time to learn more about this program, so that you'll be ready to implement it with the new school year this fall!

Learn more about the Staying Connected with Your Teen® program here!

Practical and flexible to implement!

The program can be implemented as a formal parenting workshop in five 2-hour sessions, or as a seven-unit self-paced home-study program that parents and teens can complete on their own schedule.

The Staying Connected with Your Teen® program works!

The Staying Connected with Your Teen program is recognized by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) with a rating of "Effective" in OJJDP's Model Programs Guide. OJJDP has rated the Staying Connected with Your Teen program effective in reducing:

- favorable attitudes about substance abuse
- initiation of substance abuse or sex
- violent behavior.

Research has shown the self-administered version of the program to be effective in reaching and positively impacting behaviors of families who are unlikely to attend regularly scheduled group meetings due to busy schedules or reluctance to discuss family issues in public.*

Subject: PBP Incident...

A couple sources have told me of an incident involving a PBP officer in which the officer allegedly was eating in Villa Reale Pizza on Smithfield, tried to leave without paying, and when challenged by the owner's son, the officer beat up and kicked the kid. The officer allegedly threatened retaliation if they reported it.

Supposedly, this incident was caught on surveillance camera, and ultimately fell into the hands of PO Frank Rende, who then distributed it in a text message to a bunch of cops, and showed the video to a room full of cops at the Zone station.

Don't know how credible this is, but there's enough there it requires investigation. If there is an internal investigation, the sources did not know about it and they suspect no investigation is being done, as the officer (Ron Hoege) is still at work.

I am confident you would want to know, and would take appropriate action. Please confirm you received this email...

Thanks,

Central Catholic High School

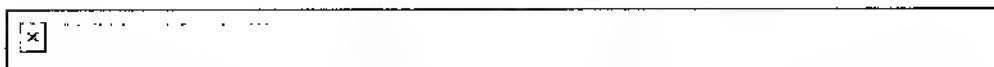

Of all the Central Catholic traditions, perhaps the most important is our commitment to provide a high-quality education to young men from all economic backgrounds.

Even with 37% of our student body receiving financial aid, Central met only 75% of the confirmed tuition assistance need this year.

We are asking alumni like you to help us to close the gap between available aid and our families' need.

The Spirit of Giving

Since November 2016, Central Catholic students have completed more than 5,000 hours of community service, including the annual mission trip to Webster Springs, WV, to help repair homes in underserved communities.

In this season of giving, if you haven't made a contribution yet, please consider a gift to the Annual Fund. Our ability to provide tuition assistance relies entirely on alumni upholding the tradition of financially supporting current students.

Make a Difference in a Student's Life

Gifts of all size make a difference and 100% of your contribution stays at Central.

Wishing you and yours a very Merry Christmas and a healthy and happy New Year!

This Week on Family-Studies

IFS senior fellow W. Bradford Wilcox examined the science on domestic violence among evangelical men, and Tomas Frejka discussed the global consequences of below replacement fertility. Mary Rose Somarriba reported on a proposal in the UK to allow for cohabitation agreements, and Laurie DeRose argued that low-income students benefit from attending schools where most of their peers come from more advantaged backgrounds.

Domestic Violence & Evangelicals

by W. Bradford Wilcox

Faith appears to play a positive role in the lives of American families, those who attend church regularly. Religious Americans are more likely to embrace family-centered values that foster marital permanence and shared commitment.

Global Fertility Trends

by Tomas Frejka

Contemporary fertility around the globe is lower than it has ever been. Since the middle of the 20th century, childbearing has declined by 50 percent.

Cohabitation Agreements

by Mary Rose Somarriba

Some politicians in the UK are pushing "cohabitation agreements" for long-term cohabiting couples. But couples who are interested in the long haul may be wise to consider marriage instead.

Schools and Upward Mobility

by Laurie DeRose

A promising avenue for upward mobility for low-income kids is for the poverty in their schools to be less concentrated than the poverty in their neighborhoods.

IFS Around the Web

Christianity Today published an article by W. Bradford Wilcox on domestic violence and evangelicals. And Wilcox and Wendy Wang's research, The Marriage Divide, was featured in a Marketplace report entitled, "A Baltimore Program Tries to Help Unmarried Couples With Children Build More Stable Relationships."

Why Family Traditions Matter

by Justin Coulson

There is one powerful thing that the happiest families do well—they establish traditions. Family traditions provide predictability and a sense of security for children. [From the Archives]
